

Just a Normal Morning

Coffee spills across my lap and shirt,
one sock missing, feet in dirt.
No milk left, the cereal dry,
eyes half-shut, I barely try.

Toothpaste dripping on my shoe,
the bus drives off—I wave to you.
I breathe in slow, then force a smile—
another morning, same old trial.